Free Download Vectric Aspire 8.0.1.7 Full Software · Configurar Router .Q: Rasterize in QGIS saves to a file in WGS 84 I'm trying to rasterize an editable raster in QGIS. I want to get the results back to WGS 84 and I try to set the CRS system to EPSG 2154 (WGS 84). After the process completed I noticed that the shape was rasterized in WGS 84, so I could see in the project properties the choice WGS 84 EPSG 2154. The problem is that the new raster is based on a non-update raster, the original one was updated at a later time. If I set the project's CRS to WGS 84 and Project properties to CRS 1 (Default CRS), the raster isn't based on the original file anymore. A: What you're describing is a post-processing effect; that is, the raster's cells retain their attributes (colour, size, etc) if they were defined in your raster's attribute table, even if their real values have changed. So, after you have saved your project, if you double-click on the raster layer and run the Rasterize function again, the same cells will appear in the results. If you want to keep the original shapefile, you should definitely make use of the Save As... function. You can use whichever CRS you want to, as long as you make sure that the new file's CRS matches the one for your data frame.
