Q: Creating form from XML - Custom validation message for custom field I have a custom field called [Recruiting_Assigned]. The type is Enum (picklist) What I would like to do is to create a form which shows a custom validation message when a value in the field is selected as "Invalid" This needs to be dynamic as the number of values could be greater than 2 (if I understand correctly) How can I do this? Thanks, A: The idea is to set up a validation rule to check that the value is not a particular picklist value. Then in the validation rule, you can return the validation error message. The people locked up in the house range in age from about 14 to 30 years old People are placed in a darkened room where they have no contact with the outside world. During the week-long experiment, people are forced to spend their time alone The video, which lasts about an hour, shows a group of people — many of them seemingly in their early 20s — being put in a darkened room for a week. They have no access to the outside world. The experiment's organizers, Second City Television, are attempting to measure how well people can adapt to isolation. And part of the experiment is to see what happens to mental health during that time
