You can see lots of Sony Acid Pro 5 (with serial number) free download links here. A: It's not supported anymore, and not even officially sold anymore. But if you ask me, it was released like 2 years after a previous Sony ACID Pro 'Serial Number' software bundle that I used for quite a long time, and you can still find it on the official Sony site. I recommend you looking at the ACID Pro libraries we have on this site, there are lots of other packs of ACID Pro and ACID Pro Studio packs that probably have these packs, also remember you can download these packs for free and even use 'Registered' versions for non-commercial use. If you have a serial number that you got from a Sony ACID Pro pack, you can download it from there for free. If you do not have a serial number, just go to the commercial websites of the packages you want, select the version and the price, and download, it's always free. Remember to mention in your post that you bought it on a specific site, I cannot really tell the site you bought it on, if you mention the price you paid, I can let you know if you can download it for free on the Internet. Q: Are all names in Objective-C obtained dynamically or are they linked to an instance of a class? I am starting to learn Objective-C so I have a question concerning names in Objective-C. When creating a new instance of a class, an object is created and an instance variable is assigned to this newly created object. I also know that an instance variable contains the value of a named property in the class. So, if I, for example, create an NSObject instance: NSObject *obj = [[NSObject alloc] init]; and I want to access the instance variable called someProperty I can use the dot operator: NSString *name = [NSString stringWithFormat:@"%someProperty"]; NSLog(@"%@",[name class]); So, I can also type: NSString *name = [NSString stringWithFormat:@"%%@",[someProperty class]]; This seems like I can only access instance variables via the instance variable names. Are instance variables always called with the name of the corresponding class or is there an alternative
