Using AutoCAD software The AutoCAD user interface is a graphical tool (user interface) that presents information and tools in a visual manner. To use AutoCAD, a user must be trained to operate the application by reading manuals or watching tutorials. The primary method of operating AutoCAD is by using the mouse, which is necessary to create and modify drawings. Designers must learn how to manipulate objects and layers to create design drawings. In addition to using the mouse to manipulate objects and layers, AutoCAD users have the option of using their keyboard to create and modify drawings. Using the keyboard involves navigating the user interface using arrow keys, which may be operated while the mouse is engaged. A user may also access AutoCAD's functionality by using the keyboard shortcuts. These are functional combinations of the keyboard's arrow keys and the letters on the keyboard. To use the shortcuts, a user must first access the Tools menu, click on User Preferences and then open the Keyboard Shortcuts tab. Tablets AutoCAD software is available for use on tablet computers. Rescue 81—a psychiatric emergency service in the Bronx, New York—is one of just a few specialized high-risk emergency transport services in the country, which treat people suffering from acute psychiatric emergencies, including both suicide and self-harm. The average patient is young, male and black, and usually arrives by ambulance. Only a third of the patients who seek treatment at Rescue 81 receive a psychiatric diagnosis. A report published in the New England Journal of Medicine in December showed that a first time treatment with a cognitive behavioral therapy intervention called METT-HEP (Meta-Analysis of treatment for suicidal behaviors in high-risk patients) decreased by nearly 50 percent the chance of suicide within a month of treatment. It also showed that a longer course of treatment had a greater impact, increasing the chances of not repeating the suicide attempt by 70 percent. “This is a high-risk service,” said Dr. Bonnie Lesperance, an emergency physician who leads the mental health team. “We’re not talking about regular suicidal patients who are just having a bad day. These are people who have come in to the emergency department who have tried and tried to do something to kill themselves, and unfortunately we have saved a lot of lives using this approach.” The cognitive behavioral therapy techniques center on behavior and attitude. For instance, it can help patients deal with self-destructive thoughts. “If someone thinks about harming themselves, instead of focusing on the thoughts, we ask them to do something else like make a shopping list,” said Dr. Lesperance. The intervention is based on a previous research project that was carried out by Columbia University’s Center for the Treatment and Study of Suicide and the National Institute of Mental Health

The short film, which has become a viral sensation among Black gay and transgender communities on social media, was directed by Spike Lee and stars Patrice O'Neal, David Marshall Grant, Joanna Angel, Valentina Sampaio, Taylor Mac, and Danielle Brooks. The film follows the life of an aging Black transgender woman who teaches the art of makeup and fashion to young gay men. "I didn't know there was a Black history with make up," O'Neal tells the film's protagonist as she goes through a private lesson. The Twitter campaign was created by Monique Alexander, a Black gay sex worker, and was initially launched by the GLAAD Task Force on Black LGBT Representation in the wake of Lee's relationship with star, and Black gay activist, Ryan Coogler and the violent backlash against actor Jussie Smollett. "I am incredibly proud to be a part of this revolutionary campaign to tell the untold stories of the Black queer experience," said Alexander. "With so many Black gay and trans individuals living in fear and feeling isolated, the mission of Paris Is Burning is to shine a light on the unfinished business of the Black LGBTQ community and uplift the work of our elders." Twitter As part of the effort, the company will give the go-ahead to anyone to use their platform and send a tweet supporting the campaign with the hashtag #parisisburning.
