Parallax: 5-minute coding workshop - pauljonas ===== hipsters_unite The website looks quite simplistic. Could you look into creating a more polished website? It feels like it would be good to have a few examples of things that were built using Parallax to see what you're about. ~~~ pauljonas I absolutely agree, we're working on a new mobile-first design. That being said, Parallax is the first 'responsive' type of website we've built and we're still very much at the beginning. An interesting place to see some Parallax is the interactable carousel on the featured page (use the mousewheel) -- The original design for cars was built around this idea. Below, each second is represented by a colored square. Note that the whole spectrum of 25 colors is not taken into account, just 10 representative ones. After all, the cursor is also a color and you're not at all familiar with all the commonly used ones. You just see it as a flat gray square. You need to know which colors belong to which form. You need to be taught what your cursor looks like. The same applies to the compiler, too. It's a bit like the compiler for a specific programming language. It has many compilers, the source languages,
