Computergolkes.com.Q: How can I tell if  $1$  and  $x$  are inverses in a field $F$  if  $\det(1+x) = \det(1-x)$ ? In $\mathbb{R}$ , if  $1$  and  $x$  are inverses then  $\det(1+x) = \det(1-x)$ .
How can I show that the same holds for an arbitrary field? A: If  $E$  is any field, then  $\{x \in E : \exists z \in E : z+z = x\}$ is a subgroup of  $E$  with  $1$  as its identity. Now apply the First Isomorphism Theorem to see that $\{x \in E : \exists z \in E : z+z = x\}$

$\cong \frac{E}{\langle 1-x \rangle}$  If  $1$  and  $x$  are inverses, then  $1-x$  generates the trivial ideal in the right hand group, meaning that the right hand group is an infinite set (i.e.  $|E| = \infty$ ) so it's not isomorphic to any group. Therefore,  $1$  and  $x$  cannot be inverses in  $E$ . A: Suppose  $1, x \in F$  and  $1-x$  is invertible (thus  $F(x)$  is a field). Let  $f(t) = t(1-x) + 1$ . Then  $f$  is a polynomial over  $F$ , and if  $f$  is a polynomial over  $F$  then  $f'$  is a polynomial over  $F$ . So  $f'(1) = \frac{f(1) - f(0)}{1 - 0} = 1 - 1 = 0$  by Lagrange's Theorem. Therefore,  $1-x$  and  $1-1=0$  are inverses.
